Moving Makes Sense

Elia Bernat

Introduction to elemental and creative body movement, using the established parameters of music and body expression with the intention to develop the capacity of expression, creativity and communication within a group.

There will be different suggestions for exploring, improvising and composing in the classroom under the aspect of the Orff-Schulwerk, using the modes, basic movement forms and the elemental terminology of creative movement and dance (Body, Space, Time, Energy and their interaction)

West African Music and Dance in Multicultural Education: The Orff-Afrique Approach

Kofi J.S. Gbolonyo

The sessions will provide an insight in the way how Orff-Schulwerk is seen and practised in Ghana, as a representative of African culture. There will be “Children’s Games with Movement and Songs”, “An Indigenous Approach to Singing” including percussion and movement, “Play the Dance – Orff Afrique Dance Drumming”, and going back to the sources of the Orff-xylophone: “Gyl – the Ghanian Traditional Xylophone and Orff-Schulwerk” with a lot of information and practical approach to traditional and contemporary gyl music for children with percussion and movement accompaniment.

Pathways in a musical, creative journey

Soili Perkiö

The essential elements of the Orff-Schulwerk teaching process are experimentation and experience. The elements of music and movement are explored through a variety of activities, which, through group experiences, become tools of self-expression. In the workshop we will learn songs, dances and musical games and analyze the process we have experienced together.

Didactic models according to different ages under the perspective of Orff-Schulwerk

James Harding

Exploration, improvisation and composition in movement. Introduction to elemental and creative body movement using the common parameters of music and body expression. Main objective is to help the development of the musical skills referring to rhythmical, melodic, formal...aspects, and the ability of creation, expression and communication.
